Preventive care vs. diagnostic care

Knowing the difference between these types of care can save you money.

Preventive care can be scheduled when you're feeling well to help keep your health on track. Annual well exams, such as a well-woman visit, and screenings or vaccines are considered preventive. This type of care is covered by your health plan.

Diagnostic care is used to determine the cause of symptoms you're experiencing. This type of care may include appointments with your doctor and tests to diagnose an issue so it can be treated. This care will have copays or other costs, as covered by your plan.
